To use Photoshop as a beginner, you have to know a bit of design, as well as how to organize your images. Photoshop relies on the concept of layers: overlapping images placed on top of each other. The purpose of placing images on layers is to create a composite, or layered, image, and then to combine each layer with a final image that you compose in the desktop. Photoshop's support of layers allows you to create any composites you want. Layers enable you to drop objects on top of other objects to create different images. You can use Photoshop to alter the appearance of the following features to enhance your photographs: Clipping: You can identify areas on a photo that are not intended to be in the final image by using a _clipping mask_. This is generally used to highlight areas on a photo where you may want to add a border or frame. Special effects: Special effects change the appearance of the final image to change the mood of a photo. For example, you can use Photoshop to add a vignette, or dark area, around an image to emphasize the subject. You can use an effects filter to add motion blur to a still photo, create various retro-looking effects, or add bubbles to a photo. Blend Modes: Photoshop includes several _blending modes_ that enable you to create various different effects. For example, you can apply a lighten blend to one layer and a darken blend to another. This enables you to add special effects to specific parts of a photo. You can create a vignette or gray out a particular area. You can also create textures or even 3-D objects in Photoshop. Filters: Filters change the way that an image is interpreted. For example, you can use a polarizing filter to change the angle or the appearance of light. Adjustments: Some other Photoshop effects don't have an effect on the resulting image but still involve moving and changing elements within an image. You can use the levels filter to adjust image brightness or contrast. You can adjust the white, black, and brightness levels, or you can select the _white balance,_ a tool that allows you to adjust the appearance of light to change the white balance. You can use the hue, saturation, and brightness controls, or you can adjust hue, saturation, and luminance, and change the resulting white balance. Raster Image Editing: You can perform major image editing on a raster image

We have also released our plans for this year's Electronic Frontiers Australia conference and the World Forum against Internet Censorship, plus we have details on the Coalition of Civil Liberties and Bodies Wider Than Borders project, which will be at EFA this year. There is also information about the launch of the Global Network Against Police and Militarism. In addition, we have details of the IIF, the International Information Security Conference, which will be hosted by the Australian Information Security Forum, and details of the 10th Anniversary Electronic Frontiers Australia conference, the Australian Book News Industry Conference, and the Australian Peace and Conflict Studies Association conference. We also have details of a number of international conferences. As a final note, there are some changes to our service providers for the new year. DNS servers on the IPv6 /64 block will be provided by JustDNS. They have been providing us service since November last year and have paid our ISP provider for that address space. Their prices are a little better than our last provider, but their prices come with a number of extra charges, so it is still cheaper than the charges from our last ISP provider. So, we've survived Christmas with continued service, but it is getting to be time to say goodbye to the ISP and start moving to the DNS servers provided by JustDNS. If you have any questions about these changes, please contact me. We'll also be shutting down the other sites before this DNS change occurs, so it is time to let other parties know of this change in service. As a final note, I'll be moving to a new ISP, but their new service is to be officially launched in September this year.
